Preventing Trafficking in Human Beings for Labour Exploitation in Supply Chains

Annotated Agenda

Trafficking in human beings (THB) is a human rights violation and a lucrative crime. In its 2012 Global Estimate of Forced Labour, the International Labour Organization (ILO) suggested that 20.9 million people were in forced labour situations worldwide and the majority of them, or an estimated 68%, were in a situation of labour exploitation. Furthermore, the 2014 ILO report, Profits and Poverty: The Economics of Forced Labour, noted that forced labour in the private economy generates US$ 150 billion in illegal profits per year, about three times more than previously estimated. However, few victims are identified and even fewer perpetrators convicted, in particular in cases of trafficking for labour exploitation. In today’s globalized economy, characterized by complex supply chains, with both materials and labour sourced from all around the world, it is difficult for buyers and consumers, including governments, to be sure that the goods or services they purchase or procure were not produced by trafficked labour. Therefore, addressing this issue of trafficking in human beings in supply chains is an area of urgent concern.

International standards have recognized the duty of both businesses and governments to undertake due diligence and to protect against human rights abuses. Some governments have now taken measures to promote compliance with international anti-trafficking standards and enact laws and policies to ensure the ethical sourcing of goods and services. Yet, the best efforts by business will only allow for due diligence within their own value chains by themselves. This is where top-down governmental action is needed to enact good governance to protect human rights. Governments have a clear role to play in delivering and enforcing legislation that not only protects workers at risk of forced labour and trafficking, but also safeguards actions of responsible businesses who require a level-playing field in order to compete fairly within the law. Furthermore, it is important that governments leverage their own large purchasing power for more transparency, to make an impact for the greater good and to ensure that taxes are not supporting trafficking in human beings. Embracing their “role in the globalization process”, as outlined in the Leaders’ Declaration of the G7 Summit of June 2015 in Elmau, Germany, governments can lead by example, setting clear criteria for compliance with human rights standards, as well as international and national good governance provisions.

To address these challenges, the OSCE Office of the Special Representative and Co-ordinator for Combating Trafficking in Human Beings (OSR/CTHB) is implementing the extra-budgetary project “Prevention of Trafficking in Human Beings in Supply Chains through Government Practices and Measures”. The overall project objective is to provide OSCE participating States with practical tools to enact concrete measures to prevent human trafficking in supply chains, as well as build their capacity to implement these measures, thus protecting human rights through good governance. By doing so, the project will also contribute to the promotion of labour and social standards in supply chains, the overall fight against corruption and the introduction of sound financial management and economic governance practices. The project will tap the momentum that has developed on eradicating THB for labour exploitation and forced labour along globalized supply chains, and will promote the implementation of the UN Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights and the UN Sustainable Development Goals.
Under the project, the OSR/CTHB will develop flexible Model Guidelines for governments on preventing trafficking in supply chains, with a focus on government procurement regulations, transparency clauses, and labour recruitment practices to address current gaps and challenges in relevant policy and practice.

One of the planned project activities is the high-level conference in Berlin on 7-8 September 2016 on Preventing Trafficking in Human Beings for Labour Exploitation in Supply Chains. This event is organized by the OSR/CTHB in close co-operation with the German OSCE Chairmanship in Office, which considers combating trafficking in human beings for labour exploitation, fostering economic connectivity and the promotion of labour and social standards in supply chains as important topics. This high-level event is part of the OSCE and Germany’s ongoing effort to raise awareness about the problem of labour exploitation in supply chains and to advocate for increased actions by governments and the private sector across the OSCE region to adopt measures to strengthen and enforce anti-trafficking protections, and to prevent this form of modern slavery in the first place.

As one of the first high-level events of its kind in the OSCE area, which also builds upon the solid foundation of OSCE commitments and recommended actions, earlier research, and previous events on this topic¹, the Berlin Conference will discuss trafficking for labour exploitation in supply chains, and present and collect existing good practices and policy measures in the OSCE area, as well as concrete cases, lessons learned and outstanding gaps in safeguarding ethical sourcing. The Berlin Conference is the launch event of the project, which includes a series of workshops to be organized in the framework of the project.

The working languages of the conference will be English and Russian.

The Office of the Special Representative and Co-ordinator for Combating Trafficking in Human Beings would like to thank the OSCE participating States that have already contributed to the Extra-budgetary project: Austria, Germany, the Netherlands and Switzerland.
